“The Serai brings a new level of luxury to this part of western Rajasthan with its grand decadent tents.”

THE SERAL, Jaisalmer

The Serai is a camp of 22 tents set in 30 acres of their desert, half an hour’s drive from Jaisalmer, Asia’s oldest inhabited fort city. The harsh quintessence of the desert after the hustle and bustle of the city of Jaisalmer is a balm to the soul—the night skies, with stars twinkling like diamonds on velvet have to be seen to be believed. The Serai brings a new level of luxury to this part of western Rajasthan, its grand, decadent tents decorated with campaign-style furniture, dhurries and throws for chilly nights, all have both a sitting room and a private terrace, and almost hilariously vast bathrooms. There are 14 Tent Suites, each with their own verandah, drawing room, spacious air-conditioned bedroom and, of course, en-suite bathroom, covering an area of approximately 1,000 sq ft. The camp has a swimming pool, inspired by a traditional Indian step well, a spa and an exquisite boutique. Modern—take traditional Rajasthani or Western—are taken in a dining tent or served picnic style, by a line of caterers. The overall effect is like something out of a dream—romantic and magical, especially at night, when your path to bed is lit by hundreds of torches and candles and, having taken delivery of your hot-water bottle, you drift off to sleep to the eerie cries of the desert wildlife.

WHEN TO GO
Late autumn, when the days are gloriously warm, but the nights chilly. Wrap up in one of the Serai’s cashmere shawls and enjoy a gin and tonic by the fire.
